Powering Your Business - IATF 16949 Automotive Quality Management System

The automotive industry is constantly evolving. The IATF 16949 standard was designed to provide a quality management system unique to the automotive sector to meet these stringent and changing requirements of the globalised supply chains.

The standard was published by The International Automotive Task Force (IATF) as a global benchmark for quality for the industry. Automotive manufacturers and their respective trade associations have even made it compulsory for suppliers in the supply chain to be certified under this scheme.

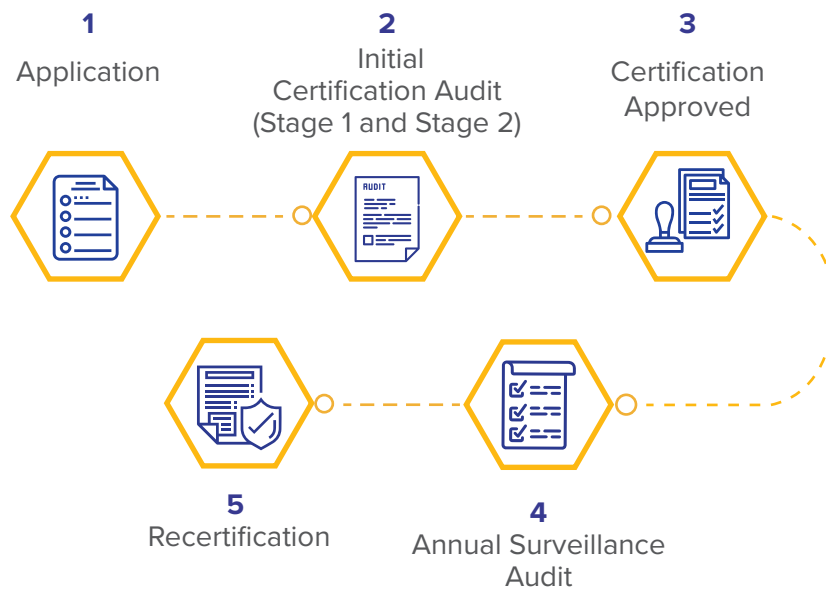

It helps companies implement a framework to improve product quality and identify risks and mitigation methods for continuous improvement. A risk-based approach to management helps prevent defects and reduce waste, streamlining operations and reduction of unnecessary costs.

SIRIM QAS is an IATF recognised certification body. With a team of competent local auditors with over 20 years' experience in providing automotive quality management systems certification, we remain to be a committed partner for the automotive industry.
